Adverbs for commenting

Introduction

"Presumably, you've tried looking in this folder.

"Yes, generally, that's where I'd expect to find it but it isn't there."

Definition

These adverbs are used to make a comment or judgement on something or to indicate which viewpoint we are speaking from.

Construction

Commenting and viewpoint adverbs are often placed at the beginning of a sentence or clause, followed by a comma, because they relate to the entire sentence or clause:

Honestly, I think it's a bad idea. [The speaker is giving you an honest opinion.] She deals with people honestly. ['in an honest way' - an adverb of manner]

Amazingly, he did well in his exam. [I'm amazed about his exam result.] He did amazingly well in his exam. [an intensifier meaning 'extremely well']

They can, however, be placed in the middle or at the end.

Clearly, she's the best person for the job. She's clearly the best person for the job. She's the best person for the job, clearly.

Because word order depends on the type and meaning of the adverb, if in doubt, refer to a good dictionary for example sentences.
