Introduction

The white egg is the biggest and the red egg is the smallest.

Definition and uses

We use superlative adjectives of superiority and inferiority to compare more than two things or people.

Construction

The construction usually depends on the number of syllables.

Superiority

One-syllable	'the' + adjective + 'est' the coldest	Antarctica is the coldest place in the world.
Two-syllables and ending in a consonant and 'y'	'the' + adjective + 'est' the busiest	September is the busiest month for us.
Others with two syllables	'the most' + adjective the most honest	She's the most honest person in the department.

More than two syllables	'the most' + adjective the most expensive	This is the most expensive car in the world.
-------------------------	---	---

Inferiority

All adjectives	'the least' + adjective	May is the least busy month for us. She's the least honest person in the department. This is the least expensive car in the world.
----------------	-------------------------	---

Note that we rarely use this construction with one-syllable adjectives. It is better to use the opposite superlative of superiority.

This is the least big house in the street. ❌

This is the smallest house in the street. ✔️

She has the least cheap car. ❌

She has the most expensive car. ✔️

It's the least good car. ❌

It's the worst car. ✔️

Two-syllable adjectives

The comparatives and superlatives of most two-syllable adjectives are formed with 'more...than' and 'the most' but here is a list of some common ones that can also add 'er' and 'est'.

Adjective	Comparative	Superlative
clever	cleverer more clever	the cleverest the most clever gentle	gentler more gentle	the gentlest the most gentle simple	simpler more simple	the simplest the most simple friendly	friendlier more friendly	the friendliest the most friendly quiet	quieter more quiet	the quietest the most quiet

narrow	narrower more narrow	the narrowest the most narrow

Irregular adjectives

	Comparative	Superlative
good	better	the best
bad	worse	the worst
far	farther/further*	the farthest/furthest*

*'Farther' and farthest' refer to physical distance whilst 'further' and 'furthest' indicate a greater level or more advanced stage of something. However, many people use 'further' and 'furthest' in both situations. For example:

We wanted to go to Toulouse but we didn't get farther/further south than Bordeaux.

The farthest/furthest I can see clearly without glasses is about 3 metres.

I've been trying to write this report all morning but I can't get further than the introduction.

I applied for a job with our main competitor but the furthest I got was the first interview.

Past participles

If the adjective is also the past participle of a verb, we do not add 'er' or 'est' even to short, one syllable adjectives. Instead we use the rule for long adjectives.

Examples

Adjective	Comparative	Superlative	Example
-----------	-------------	-------------	---------

lost	more lost	the most lost	The closer I got to the town centre the more lost I became.
burnt	more burnt	the most burnt	This piece of toast is more burnt than the first piece.
bored	more bored	the most bored	She was the most bored she had ever been, there was nothing for her to do.

Intensifiers

Comparative - a small difference	Comparative - a big difference	Examples a little a bit a little bit slightly	much a lot a great deal far not nearly as...as... nowhere near as...as... nothing like as..as [informal] quite a bit	My new car is a lot faster but far less economical than my old one. I chose this hotel because it's slightly less expensive. I go to the gym much more often than I used to. I can't run nearly as quickly as I could when I was young.

With superlative adjectives, we use 'by far' and 'easily' as intensifiers. For example:

Our company sells by far the most cars in Europe.
She's easily the tallest person in her family.

Examples

They have four daughters. The oldest is nine and the youngest is one.

The pink flower is the prettiest.

April is usually the wettest month in England.

Our company is the most successful in Europe.

We often have the best weather in September.

I have the worst office in the department!

The train is the least stressful way to travel.

This is the least interesting part of my job!

Further information

One-syllable adjectives

Most of these take 'er' and 'est' for superiority but there are a few, particularly some ending in 'l', that are better with 'more...than...' For example:

I'm more apt to forget things when I'm tired.
Some dreams seem more real than others.

And there are a few others which can use both forms. For example:

She's frailer/more frail than her sister.
That's clearer/more clear now - thank you for explaining.
It would be fairer/more fair to divide it equally.

For inferiority, most take 'not as...as...' but a few use both forms. For example:

It isn't as cold as it was.
It's less cold than it was.

Riding a bike isn't as safe at night.
Riding a bike is less safe at night.

'All the more'

This expression means 'even more than previously or otherwise'. We can use it with adjectives or adverbs or with neither. We can also use 'all the less' in a similar way as well as 'all the' + comparative adjective or adverb. For example:

I really can't wait for my holiday and it's all the more exciting for being outside Europe - it will be my first time.

We were already doing well and we worked all the faster when we heard there'd be a bonus for finishing before the deadline.

We've never had much faith in him and his arguments are all the less convincing when you consider his lack of experience.

I'm starting to recover now and I feel all the better for your visit - thanks for coming.

Note that 'even more/less' or 'even + er' are generally more common in conversation.

Comparing two qualities

We don't use 'er' to compare two qualities of the same person or thing. For example:

Pierre is more sad than angry. ✓
[His sadness is greater than his anger.]

Pierre is sadder than angry. ✗

The film was more funny than tragic.
I think it's more red than orange.
She's more of an artist than a poet.

Similes

We use 'as...as...' in similes - standard expressions which use a comparison of two things that are alike. It's an alternative to using 'very' or 'really'.

Her hair is as white as snow.
I love cycling here - it's as flat as a pancake
It's impossible to make him change his mind - he's as stubborn as a mule.

There are many of these in use in informal English and they are often used in a fun or joking manner.

Note that we cannot use 'so' in similes.

Superlative adjectives with 'the least'

With one-syllable adjectives, we usually prefer to use the opposite adjective of superiority:

This is the least dark colour. ❌ This is the lightest colour. ✔️

With other adjectives, both are often possible:

This is the least expensive car. ✔️ This is the cheapest car. ✔️

However, we need to be careful because these kinds of sentence don't always have the same meaning. For example:

'February was the least cold month of last winter' isn't the same as 'February was the hottest month of last winter.' [because none of the winter months were hot.]

'So'

For comparatives of inferiority using 'not...as...', we can substitute 'so' for the first 'as':
He isn't as/so tall as his brothers.

'not as...as...' is more common. 'not so...as...' is more likely to be used with ellipses than in full sentences:

It isn't so cold today. [as yesterday]

People aren't so poor nowadays. [as they used to be]

Note that we cannot use 'so' in comparatives of equality:

It's as cold today as yesterday. It's so cold today as yesterday. ❌ or in the following similar kinds of expression:

I drove as fast as I could. ✔️ I drove so fast as I could. ❌

I'll call him as soon as possible. ✔️ I'll call him so soon as possible. ❌

However, 'so' is possible in some expressions which are not comparatives. For example:

'as/so far as' = to the degree or extent that

'as/so long as' = on condition that or since

As/so far as I'm aware, there's no meeting this week.

As/so long as I get paid extra, I'll work on Saturday.

As/so long as you're dealing with this, I'll go to lunch now.

'Most' as an intensifier

The word 'most' can be used in a way that is not a superlative. It has the same meaning as words like 'very', 'really' and 'extremely'.

Note that this structure is rarely used and sounds old-fashioned so do not use it. The following examples are for information only :

Intensifier	Superlative
I read a most interesting article in this magazine.* [I read a very interesting article - there is no suggestion of a comparison with other articles.]	This is the most interesting article in the magazine.
This soup is most delicious.*	This is the most delicious soup I've ever had.

* It is much more natural in conversation to say:

I read a really interesting article.
This soup is absolutely delicious.

Other comparative and superlative structures

Here are some examples of different ways to express comparatives and superlatives:

It was as successful a venture as he could have hoped.
Their request deserved as quick a response as we were able to give.
It's isn't as much fun working here as it used to be.
I have a much faster journey to work now.
A male-dominated company is less likely to offer flexible working hours.
The most likely outcome is that sales will start slowly and take off later in the year.
It isn't as high quality as the previous model.
What's most important to me is job satisfaction.
What I like best about him is his ability to explain things clearly.
He lived the longest of all his family.
I like most kinds of cheese but my favourite is Camembert.
