

Zero conditional

Introduction

If you heat water in a kettle, it boils.

Definition

The zero conditional refers to real events. The result of the condition is always the same.

Construction

Construction	Time reference	Example
'if' + present, + present	any time condition + any time result	If the sun shines , people are happier.

As with all conditionals, the 'if' clause can come first or second. When it comes first, it is followed by a comma.

Uses

Zero conditional sentences are used to talk about general truths and facts, not about individual, specific situations.

Use	Examples
Scientific facts	If you add salt to water, it boils more quickly.
Universal truths	People put on weight if they eat too much.

Things that happen regularly If I leave home at 8.00, I arrive at work at 9.00.

Note that because the result is always the same, we can use 'when' as an alternative to 'if'. We also sometimes use 'whenever', especially for things that happen regularly:

If/when people don't drink, they get thirsty.
If/when/whenever he s late for work, his boss gets angry.

Present continuous

We can also use the present continuous:

If it s raining, people carry umbrellas.
If people are carrying umbrellas, it s probably raining.

Imperative

Whenever you re tired, take a break.

When I m working, don't disturb me.

If you go to Paris, visit the Louvre.

Modals

Some modal verbs might be used in the main clause.

If you go to another country, you should try to speak the language.
You can get a refund if the plane is delayed.

Zero or first conditional?

The first conditional is used for real, likely events. Compare these two sentences:

If I leave home at 8.00, I arrive at 9.00. [this refers to every time I leave at 8.00]
If I leave home at 8.00, I'll arrive at 9.00. [this refers to a specific occasion in the future]

Examples

The alarm goes off whenever there's a fire.

Only children go in the garden if it's raining.

When you work with people from other countries, you might have to do things differently.

If she's eating then she's getting better. .

If you visit London, don't miss the Beefeaters at the Tower of London.
