Uses of the future perfect simple

Uses	Examples
When the action occurs before another action or specified time	By this time next week I'll have finished writing my report. Will you have eaten before you go out? We won't have finished the project by the deadline.
To express duration with stative and some mixed verbs	Mr. Cook will have had the report for a week by the time he reads it. She will have been in Tokyo for a month when we visit her. How long will I have owned this car when I have it re-sprayed next week?
Reflecting on past or current experiences or a plan	If I do nothing else, at least I will have written this novel.
Making deductions about past or present events or situations	Don't worry - I'm sure Karen will have called him yesterday to cancel it. There's no point calling him on his office number - he'll have gone to lunch.

As with all future tenses the future perfect is not used in clauses that start with time expressions such as 'when', 'after', 'before' and 'as soon as'. In this case, use the present perfect.

When I've finished work, I'm playing football with John. ✅

Casual speech

I'll've

You'll've

He'll've

She'll've

It'll've

We'll've

They'll've

In formal conversations or formal writing, use the full form.

In informal conversations or informal writing, use the contracted form.

Uses of the future perfect continuous

Uses	Examples
To talk about an action that will continue up to a specified future time.	By this time next week I'll have been travelling for three days.
To talk about something that we assume is happening at the moment.	You should go home now; your parents will have been worrying about you all day.
To talk about an action that we believe has been happening recently. [It's not about the future.]	Bankers will have been asking themselves if it was a good idea to relax the rules on mortgage lending or not.

A 'specified future time' is often indicated with the use of 'by', examples:

- by Wednesday
- by three o'clock

- by the time he gets here
- by this time next year
