For past habits with words like always, constantly and forever. Normally these sentences show disapproval.	Our previous temp was always having problems with his PC. My last boyfriend was constantly cancelling at the last minute. The children were forever playing on their 'gameboys'.
When explaining or asking for an explanation of a current or recent action, particularly if the action is seen as wrong.	What were you doing with my new computer? I was only borrowing it for a minute. Why were you looking in my desk drawer? I was searching for the key to the filing cabinet.

For verbs that are not normally used in the continuous tense, please see the rules for stative verbs.

In English, there is often more than one way to say something. In certain cases, the use of the past simple past in the above examples is also grammatically correct. For example the sentence:

I was watching the television whilst Susan was cooking.

can also be expressed as:

I watched the television whilst Susan cooked.
