

Quantifiers: further information

'Every' or 'each'?

They are often very similar in meaning and usage but there are some differences:

1. Each can be used alone but every can't so:

Each/every delegate was given a name badge when they arrived.
Each was given a name badge when they arrived.

2. We use every with words like 'nearly' and 'almost':

I've sent invitations to nearly every supplier we deal with.

I've sent invitations to nearly each supplier we deal with.

3. We use every with some abstract nouns in order to emphasise a positive attitude.
For example:

I have every confidence that you will succeed.

We have every reason to believe that the situation will improve next year.

He has every hope of winning the contract.

'The few' and 'the little'

These are used with nouns to emphasise a small number or amount:

I spent the little money I had on a new coat.

They might suggest 'not enough':

This is one of the few departments in the company that is making a profit.
[Not enough departments are performing well]

Or refer to a special or select group:

Ours is one of the few companies of its kind to gain success in the US.

Similarly, we can use 'what few' and 'what little':

We need to work hard to keep what few clients we have left.
Let's use what little time we have effectively.

'Few' with possessive adjectives

'Few' can be used with possessive adjectives and demonstratives:

These few buildings here are going to be demolished.
I really enjoyed my few days off last week.

'Many' and 'a' + singular noun

This structure is more likely to be found in formal or literary English:

Many a man has produced his best work late in life.

But it can be conversational, especially when talking about repeated actions:

I spent many a pleasant afternoon just walking on the beach.
I stayed out late many a night when I was young.

'Much' in negative and interrogative sentences

Note that in negative and interrogative sentences, we need to pay attention to word order to make our meaning clear. For example:

Does he watch TV much? [= Does he often/regularly watch TV?]
Does he watch much TV? [= Does he watch a lot of programmes?]

I don't watch TV much. [not often]
I don't watch much TV. [not a lot]

Similarly:

Do you write letters much? [= Do you often write letters?]
Do you write many letters? [= Do you write a large number of letters?]

I don't write letters much. [not often]
I don't write many letters. [not a lot]

'Much' in passive sentences

Much is commonly used in passive sentences such as these:

The new building was much admired.

Your offer is much appreciated.

Our car is very old but much loved.

'Much/many' or 'a lot of' in interrogative and negative sentences

There is a slight difference in meaning between the following two sentences:

Do you have much money?

and

Do you have a lot of money?

Depending on the context, the first question might be referring to a large amount of money or simply asking how much money someone has or if they have enough.

The second question is asking specifically if someone has a large amount.

There is less difference between negative sentences:

He doesn't have many friends.

and

He doesn't have a lot of friends.

Depending on the context or tone of voice, either sentence might be stating that the person doesn't have a large number of friends or emphasising a lack of friends in general.

'Many' with 'the' and possessive adjectives

We can use these in front of many:

The many people who attended the conference said it had been very productive.

He talked to us about his many roles.

'As much/many as'

We use 'as much/many as' to stress the size of an approximate amount or quantity:

As many as 300 people are expected to be there.

They predict as much as a 40% increase in sales next year.

'Some' as 'approximately'

We can use some before a quantity to mean 'approximately':

Some 65% of our employees are women.

We're expecting some 500 people to attend the conference.

'Some' with singular nouns

In informal English, we sometimes use some with a singular noun. It is used when we are not being specific - because we don't know, can't remember or it doesn't matter which. To emphasise the lack of importance, we can add 'or other'

"How was your trip to Rome?"

"Not bad but I went to some fish restaurant and had something that made me really ill."

"Did Jenny enjoy her holiday?"

"Yes, she met some man or other but I don't think it will last."

Intensifiers

We can use intensifiers to give extra information. Here are some examples:

every
'almost' and words with a similar meaning such as 'nearly' and 'virtually'	They ate nearly every sandwich. Almost every client speaks French.
few little

'so' To emphasise a small quantity or amount	There are so few specialists in this field.	I have so little to do today; I think I'll leave early.
'too' Not enough	We have too few English speakers in the team.	We have too little time for this.
'as...as...' To emphasise a small quantity or amount, especially if smaller than expected	A lot of businesses are closing in this city; there are now as few as three factories.	You can buy one of our cars for as little as €9,000.

	a few	a little
'only', 'just' To emphasise a small quantity or amount	We only have a few more days to finish this - we need to work faster.	I need just a little more time.
'quite' To suggest 'quite a lot', maybe more than expected	There are quite a few good restaurants in this town	✗

Note that in contrast to the usual rule, when we add 'only' to a little or a few, it usually suggests a negative or unfavourable situation:

There are only a few IT specialists in the department - we need to recruit some more.

Sometimes, however, there is a suggestion of reassurance and a positive attitude:

I won't be long - I only have a few more things to do and then I'll help you.
Don't worry; we only have to spend a little more time on this.

But when the noun is negative, the feeling is positive:

There was only a little difficulty finding new recruits much	many

'so'	I enjoyed it so much . He has so much money.	We have so many problems.
'a good/great'	✗	We have a good many problems.
'too' More than is needed or desired	He has too much money. He travels too much .	We have too many problems.
'twice as...' 'half as...' etc.	I only earn half as much as my boss! We need three times as much money for this project as we have.	There are twice as many women in the company compared with ten years ago. We have 10 times as many branches as our competitors.

	a lot (of)
'rather', 'quite' Depending which word we stress when speaking, 'quite' can emphasise a large amount or modify it	He travels rather a lot . He has quite a lot of money. He has quite a lot of money. [these two both emphasise a large amount] He has quite a lot of money. [a lot but not an exceptional or surprising amount]
'such'	He has such a lot of money. He travels such a lot .

Examples

When the candidates arrived, each was shown to a waiting room.

If we work together on this, we have every chance of success.

We get together every few months.

"Do you speak German?" "Yes, a little." "That's unusual. The few French people I've met are more likely to speak Spanish."

I have.

I don't know much about the situation but I'll share what little information

There are quite a few of us in this office at the moment - we need more desks.

I'd like to visit these few villages here.

We only have a few more days here so we won't have time to see everything.

One of the best things about this city is the many different things you can buy in the markets.

I know many of you will agree that much can be achieved if we continue to work together.

Much of my time is spent on the phone.

The cathedral and city centre are much admired by visitors.

Many's the time I've fallen asleep at my desk.

Since retiring, I've spent many a pleasant afternoon just relaxing and listening to music. I don't do a great deal in the mornings either!

They're planning a much needed break.

There are some seventy art galleries in Paris but you should check the opening times before visiting any of them.

"How do you know that?" "Oh, I read it in some book or other."

From:

<https://tools.e-exercises.com/> - Ressources pour les apprenants

Permanent link:

https://tools.e-exercises.com/doku.php?id=en:grammar:quantifiers:further_information

Last update: 2023/02/14 14:32

