Auxiliary verb: 'do'

Do you want sugar in your coffee?

We can use the verb 'do' alone: I do my e-learning.

Or as an auxiliary with a main verb to form questions and negatives:

Do you do your elearning at weekends?
I don't do my elearning at weekends.

The auxiliary verb does not have a specific meaning but is necessary to form these structures.

Examples

He doesn't feel well.

Does this train go to London?

Do you like steak? Yes, I don't like pork.
